GARFIELD SCHOOL STARTS NEW CUSTOM

HOLD NIGHT EXERCISES SO THE FATHERS MAY ATTEND.

PROGRAM AT FRANKLIN

Give "Mother Goose's Garden Party" This Afternoon—Extemporaneous Speaking in Primary.

An innovation has been made in the closing exercises of the Garfield school this spring in order to give the fathers of the children an equal opportunity with the mothers in seeing through the entertainment given, the progress made by the children during the term's work. For that reason the exercises are to be held tonight at 7:30 o'clock at the school house instead of in the afternoon so that fathers who are employed during the day may attend.

On account of the size of the rooms only the parents of the children are invited to the exercises. The entertainment will include folk dances, recitations and some music with the two main features being a shadow pantomine, and extemporaneous speeches made by the children.

The last named is an entirely new departure in primary work and has been introduced by the teachers of the Garfield, Miss Ada Albert and Miss Opal Key, who believe that originality of expression, a quick thought conception of a subject and the correct use of words should be taught simultaneous with other primary work and that it can best be done through this method combined with other instruction in language. The Garfield pupils are the first, second and third grades. The teachers are pleased with the results of this line of work and the children will give their first public exhibition in extemporaneous speaking tonight.

The rooms of the school have been prettily decorated and the children will aid in the general entertainment for their parents tonight as well present the program.

The children of the Franklin school held their closing exercises this afternoon giving "Mother Goose's Garden Party." A big crowd of visitors attended the entertainment which was in the nature of a pageant and very nicely given by the children. Theoe were also several recitations and musical numbers given.

Monday afternoon the annual picnic for the Franklin children will be held on the school house lawn. The teachers are Miss Dena Hartman, principal and Mrs. D. K. Seckington.

WATERS OF 102 FALLING—DOWN 2 FEET LAST NIGHT.

The waters of the 102 river have fallen about two feet since last night. The water is still too high to admit of finding out the exact state of the broken dam or to make any predictions as to the outcome or how long the dam will hold.

The water is still slowly falling today but is still out of the bank in the lower places.

The bandit was identified as Royal Walton. The postal clerks, it is believed, have come here from St. Joseph, Mo.

INNUMERABLE OBSTACLES TO GET ARMY ACROSS OCEAN

Secretary Daniels Told Investigating Committee About Work—President's Permission Given.

Washington, May 14.—Facing "innumerable obstacles" the United States was placed to get an effective army on the battle front in France in a shorter time than the British Secretary of Navy Daniels today told the senate sub-committee "no man could deny that within fifteen months after our entering into the war, the American army was in sufficient strength adequately to assist the Allies, yet the American army had to be transported across three thousand miles of ocean in face of the supreme effort of the German submarines, then across the width of France while Great Britain was within sound of the German guns."

Washington, May 14.—In reply to reports that the President would repudiate Secretary Daniels for making public his speech at Yorktown and cablegram to Sims criticizing the British navy, Secretary Tumulty today formally announced the President gave Daniels full permission to make matters public in his reply to the Sims charges before the Senate naval committee.

ABSENTEEISM IN THE SENATE

DIFFICULT TO GET ENOUGH MEMBERS TO DO BUSINESS.

MEASURES ARE DELAYED

Can't Get a Majority of Any Committee in Session Now, Owing to the Absence of So Many.

Washington, D. C.—Absenteeism in the Senate has become such a habit that it has been necessary to transfer from one committee to another the resolution introduced some days ago by Senator Borah, of Idaho, for an investigation of campaign contributions to presidential candidates. In asking for that transfer, Senator Borah explained that because of the absence of Senators it had been impossible to get a quorum of the committee to which the resolution originally had been referred.

Still another evidence of absenteeism which prevails under the present Senate management was furnished recently by Senator Lodge, the Republican floor leader. He gave notice to the Senate that he would again call up the Knox peace resolution for consideration on May 11. That he did not call up the resolution a day or so earlier, the Republican floor leader explained, was due to the absence of a number of Senators from the city. He thought the absentee should have notice.

Meanwhile, as pointed out by Senator Thomas, of Colorado, the Senate is transacting business with only a handful of Senators present, and appropriation bills carrying hundreds of millions have been passed without a roll call and without the presence of as many as twenty Senators out of a membership of ninety-six. It has been necessary frequently of late "to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the presence of Senators," such directions following the point of "no quorum."

In taking his campaign contributions resolution from one committee to another, Senator Borah, one of the outspoken Republicans of the Senate, admitted that it is difficult to get enough members of any committee to do business nowadays.

"Mr. President, a few days ago I offered a resolution calling for an investigation of campaign expenditures concerning which I wish to say a word in no sense reflecting upon the committee, for I do not intend to reflect upon it," explained Senator Borah.

"It is pretty difficult to get a majority of any committee in session now, owing to the absence of so many Senators. Therefore, without intending to reflect upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and for the reason that it is difficult to get a majority of the committee assembled, I ask unanimous consent that this committee be discharged from the further consideration of Senate resolution No. 357, and that it be brought to the floor of the Senate in order that I may have it referred to where it has to go in any event, namely, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate."

The Senate agreed to the transfer of the Borah resolution thus admitting that absenteeism is delaying the consideration of legislation. The Borah resolution was introduced following his charges on the floor of the Senate that both General Wood and Governor Lowden, Republican candidates for the presidency, were spending vast sums of money in their primary campaigns, and that a group of millionaires were understood to have underwritten a million-dollar preconvention fund for General Wood. However, at the present rate of progress on the Borah resolution in the Senate, the primaries and nominating conventions will have passed into history before there is any action taken toward an investigation of these alleged slush funds. There has already been several weeks' delay, and even should the new committee act promptly the nomination of some candidate will have been made before the country learns how much money was spent in the primaries.

CONTRACTOR RANDALL LOST TOOLS IN BRIDGE WASHOUT

Bridge Taken Out by High Water at Burlington Junction Is Undamaged and Can be Used.

Judge E. T. Bailey and W. W. Randall went to Burlington Junction this morning to inspect the damage done by the high water when it washed out the center bridge over the Nodaway river, just half a mile west of the Junction. The bridge has been unsafe for some time and about a month ago the county court ordered new steel piling and the men have been at work for the past week driving it. Three of the piles had been driven when the men quit work Tuesday night, but the water came up rapidly over night and the bridge slipped from the scaffolding on the west end and swung down the stream. The bridge had been fastened securely to the piling on the east side, and still rests upon it, with the other end pointing downstream and resting on the bed of the river.

Mr. Randall lost all of his tools and equipment there by the wash-out. His damage will exceed $1,000.

It is thought the bridge is undamaged and can be salvaged and used somewhere else. Judge C. E. Walker favors putting in a double span bridge across the Nodaway. But at best it will be fall before the bridge could be in place, and in the meantime travel to Burlington Junction will be forced to the road south.

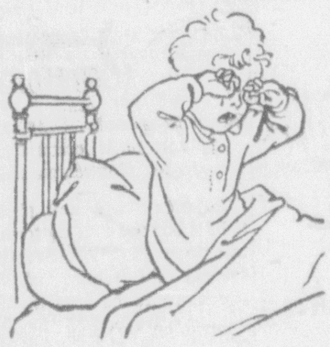
REPUBLICAN FIGHT IN KANSAS CITY.

Here is what the Kansas City Star had to say about one of the factions of the Missouri Republicans: "Republicanism yesterday achieved its greatest triumph in the history of the party in Missouri. It was not against their ancient and avowed enemy that the forces of the faith were arrayed, but against an intolerant, arrogant and desperate group of men who assumed to represent the 'new Republicanism' and whose only hope and intention was to bring the local Republican organization to the ruin of utter desolation unless they could rule and control it. Nor was it a fight within the Republican party, although many of those who were marshaled under the banner of revolt claimed to be Republicans. It was a fight against an element dominated absolutely and misled pathetically by the most conspicuous agency of political disorganization in this community."

MOTHER!

"California Syrup of Figs"
Child's Best Laxative



Accept "California" Syrup of Figs only—look for the name California on the package, then you are sure your child is having the best and most harmless physic for the little stomach liver and bowels. Children love its fruity taste. Full directions on each bottle. You must say "California".

Here is what the Kansas City Journal had to say about the Star and the other faction of the Missouri Republicans: "At this time, when right has triumphed and truth is vindicated, it is well to speak plainly. The assault planned and conducted against the Republican party in Kansas City had no other motive than to carry out the private plans and purposes of the Kansas City Star. Back of that assumption of dictatorship lies a story of political mendacity and selfishness unparalleled in the record of Missouri politics. * * * Confessing that is is not a Republican newspaper, the Star nevertheless brutally stretched forth its hands to control the Republicans of this county in order that it should not have to confess its failure to make good that pledge. Driven to the fury of desperation the Star struck madly and assaulted character recklessly, going down to defeat beaten and humiliated, a victim of its own deliberate folly. It had staked its all upon a game of which it assumed from the first it was the master. It imagined that it would be comparatively easy to browbeat and mislead the Republicans of Kansas City into carrying out its private pledges. It saw visions in the clouds and heard whispers in the wind proclaiming its own invincibility. Perhaps it actually pictured one of its owners already appointed ambassador to France as a reward of services rendered, and the states of Missouri and Kansas measured out as a political satraphy over which it should have patronage dominion. * * * "

The Journal congratulates the Republicans of this county for the magnificant stand they made around the colors of their party. For those who fought for the Star it has no feeling save regret that they permitted themselves to be deluded and misled. The Star was to be the great beneficiary of this "movement." It alone knew what negotiations, if any, had transpired to determine its course. The hundreds of good citizens who followed its leadership were blinded and prejudiced by a glamor of power and a deliberate and purposeful campaign of misrepresentation that grew more and more iniquitous as its probable success waned. * * *

The Star may continue to vilify and malign the Republican organization of this city, but a great jury, composed of more than fourteen hundred of most loyal and honorable men and women from all over the state of Missouri, has given the verdict of vindication and commendation against which continued protests by the Star will only be indicative of bitter personal disappointment and selfish ambitions thwarted.

DAY SET APART FOR FOOLING

Practical Jokes Common to April 1 Have Been Indulged in for Many Generations.

There is much uncertainty respecting the origin of All Fools' day, April 1, when for generations the people of many lands have held it quite permissible to play practical jokes on one another. Some think it had its origin in a miracle play of the middle ages, performed at Easter time. The custom of sending one upon a bootless errand on the first day of April has been supposed to be a travesty on the sending hither and thither of the Savior from Annas to Caiaphas, from Caiaphas to Pilate, from Pilate to Herod, and from Herod to Pilate, for these scenes in the Savior's life formed the subject of the miracle play performed at Easter, which usually occurs in the month of April. Others think it more probable that it is a relic of some old, heathen Celtic festival. It is believed that both England and Germany derived the custom from France. In France one thus imposed upon is called "un poisson d'Avril" (an April fish). In England such a person is called "an April fool," in Scotland a gowk. Gowk is the Scotch for cuckoo, and also signifies a foolish person.

INSISTED ON HAVING CANDY

Liberal Supply of Caramels Necessary to Make Horse Pose for Statue of Lafayette.

Horses can be temperamental at times, as Paul W. Bartlett, the sculptor, found when he sought to induce a high-spirited animal to pose quietly in his West Fourth street studio, the New York Evening Sun says. The sculptor is now working on the statue of Lafayette, which is to be presented to the city of Metz in France by the Knights of Columbus.

An aristocratic as well as an artistic horse was needed for reproduction as Lafayette's mount. After some searching, Mr. Bartlett got in touch with the proper animal and invited him down to the studio. Part of the door and side of the building were removed to get the horse into the studio and when inside he promptly knocked over several plaster casts of considerable value, especially to the artist.

After a preliminary experiment Mr. Bartlett was delighted to find that under the soothing spell of the caramel the wonderfully lined animal would stand contentedly chewing for long periods while the wily sculptor transformed him into a statue, so to speak.

Messages to Mars.

Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz estimates that a wireless station for the transmission of signals to Mars would cost in the neighborhood of a billion dollars, rather more than any enthusiast would be willing to spend on the remote chance of establishing such communications.

The Sperryscope (Brooklyn) suggests that transmission of signals by light is entirely practicable. It says:

"Presupposing that the Martians possess telescopes which are at least half as powerful as our own, our estimate is that some 150 or 200 of the Sperry high intensity searchlights, each over a billion candlepower, would be sufficient for this purpose. If operated together they would appear as a star of the seventh magnitude to the inhabitants of Mars, and a light of such brilliance would, of course, be easily discernible through a telescope in clear weather."

Beautiful Martinique.

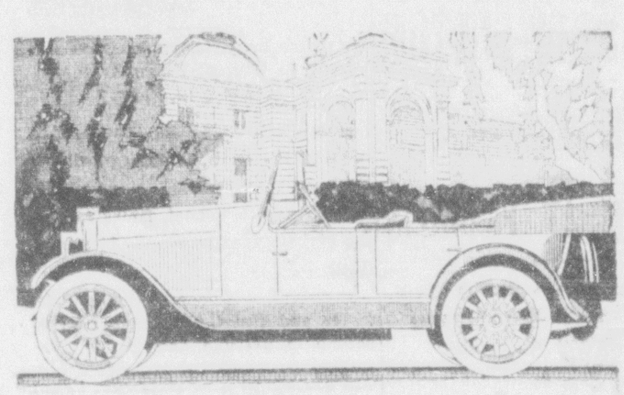
Martinique, where 18 years ago occurred one of the worst volcanic disasters that human history has ever known, is one of the important islands of the West Indies retained by France in the desperate fighting for their possession. The capital, Fort-de-France, is an amazingly picturesque town at the head of a beautiful bay. Tourists have been prompted to term Martinique an ideal paradise. It is a lotus land of perpetual summer, with an endless variety of highlands and lowlands. Martinique also has the serpent of Eden, the dreaded fer de lance, which is the only poisonous snake found on any of the islands north of Trinidad. It oftentimes grows to a length of six feet, is quick and powerful, and its poison works almost instantaneously.

Sugar Mills Making Saltpeter.

In the sugar factory at Pecky, Bohemia, successful experiments have been made with the manufacture of saltpeter from the waste liquids of the mill. It is calculated that under normal conditions the beet sugar factories of Czecho-Slovakia will produce 6,000 to 7,000 tons of saltpeter annually. This quantity is considered sufficient for the production of explosives. In Prague a corporation, capitalized at 15,000,000 crowns has been organized to manufacture explosives under a permit of the government. The factory will be located at Pardubice, but the offices of the corporation will be at Prague.

From the Earth to the Moon.

According to the Journal of the Royal Artillery, a shell with a muzzle velocity of five miles a second, if fired at the correct angle, would become an attendant satellite of the earth, and would go round it in a little less than one and a half hours. If the speed were increased to seven miles a second, the shell would go into space altogether.



The Car Problem is "Gas"

HOW

SOLVES IT

GASOLINE is steadily going down in grade. Motor car engineers are much concerned. Some have found a remedy by accepting the Chalmers principle of Hot Spot and Ram's-horn.

For this principle has supplied the answer to the problem of "gas."

Hot Spot transforms the raw, inferior "gas" into a fine fuel, simply by "breaking up" the particles into a "cloud."

Ram's-horn, minus abrupt sharp corners, short in length and ingeniously designed, makes the distance "gas" travels from Hot Spot to each cylinder equal.

At a velocity estimated at 100 miles an hour the "gas cloud" is rushed through Ram's-horn and the results are marked:

Quick starting
Power
Smooth action
Spark plugs seldom foul
Absence of engine troubles such as burned bearings and scored cylinders.

The sum of results from Hot Spot and Ram's-horn looms large in your mind once you become a Chalmers owner and you, too, will say Chalmers is one of the few great cars of the world.

ALL'S FAIR

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Here's a story about a nurse who didn't marry a patient. Graduated from Sanburn Memorial hospital in the big city, with an engraved, beribboned diploma, and an R. N. after her name, Susie Hopewell accepted a position as superintendent of Belleview hospital in the small city of Rushington, and there she met David Kling.

David had never been sick a day in his life, except with the mumps and measles when he was a youngster. Nevertheless, when he saw Susie Hopewell, David decided that he needed a nurse, not because Susie was a nurse, but because Susie was Susie, and her being a nurse was just incidental.

David was proprietor of a jewelry-phonograph-sewing machine-camera store, and he first saw Susie when she entered the place on business. The business was the purchase of a sewing machine badly needed at the hospital.

Now David was a very ingenious young man, albeit somewhat reserved and backward when it came to the business of wooing. The moment he saw Susie step into the store the little engine that operated on his inferiority side began to work queerly. As he walked toward the prospective customer he was afraid its bumping would frighten her. However, she seemed quite composed and he came to the conclusion that perhaps she had not noticed the unusual sound.

In stories all nurses are pretty, and this one is no exception in that regard. Susie had big eyes that usually appeared gray, but at times seemed shaded with deep blue. She was neither slender, short, tall nor chunky. Her hair was light brown, and while it could not be called luxuriant, there was enough of it, without paid-for additions, to be done up in a business-like, nevertheless attractive, coiffure.

"I Need a Sewing Machine."

"I need a sewing machine," Susie said, and David stopped staring and sagely remembered what she was there for.

Once out of his daze, he tried to cover the fact that he had been in one by rapid monologue, which was rather inane, but served to make up for the time he had consumed in staring at Susie.

Susie selected a machine and paid for it, requesting that it be sent to the hospital, and after she left David drifted into a waking dream. Susie certainly got a bargain when she bought that machine, for a young man's heart was thrown in without extra charge.

The apparent hopelessness of his dream brought David out of it.

"I'm a goner," he half groaned. "But what's the use? I don't know her and there's no chance of getting acquainted unless I get sick, and then the store would go to ruin, and who wants to marry a bankrupt man? Besides, I might as well admit that I haven't enough nerve to go after her."

However, as has been said, David was an ingenious young man, and it was not long before his brain got to work on a scheme which had for its object the forming of Susie Hopewell's acquaintance, and, some distance in the future, the marrying of her.

Two sewing machines were to be delivered on the same trip, and a short time before the driver of the livery called for them David might have been seen busy with a screwdriver about the mechanism of the one ordered by the superintendent of Belleview hospital. He might have been seen thus engaged, but he took pains to make sure that he was not.

He watched the machines leave on the truck and with a queer glitter in his eyes began straightening up the phonograph record racks.

There were no developments that day, but the next afternoon David received a call from Belleview hospital.

"The new machine I bought of you doesn't work," said a sweetly familiar voice on the wire. "I need it right now, so please send some one in a hurry to fix it."

Some one went in a hurry. David sent himself.

Susie ushered him into the presence of the obstinate machine, and he produced a screwdriver from his tool bag to remedy the trouble, of which he was the cause.

"You won't need that," smiled Susie. "It's something about the belt that's wrong."

With surprise David noted that her statement was true. Something was wrong with the belt, and the bobbin, which he intended should have become balky, worked smoothly.

As he busied himself repairing the belt, David managed to entice Susie into conversation, and when he left he felt that he had made some progress, although he was still mystified. The mystery was solved when he got back and learned that a man had been sent out to Joseph Freedmann's home to repair a new machine.

"The delivery man got them mixed," David decided; but he was just as well pleased, for the broken belt had served its purpose as effectively as the bobbin might have done.

Thus did David Klinger and Susie Hopewell get acquainted, and, encouraged by his progress of the first day, David summoned enough courage to invite Susie to attend the theater with him.

Susie seemed to welcome his attentions, and soon he was calling on her with considerable regularity. Three months after the purchase of the sewing machine that had served to guide their destinies, they became engaged.

"Isn't it wonderful," he observed one night, "what little things serve to bring a man and woman together?"

"Yes," she agreed. "I once heard of a man who met his fate just because a strong wind blew a hat from a young lady's head, and he ran after it for her."

"That case is no stranger than ours," said David. "Just a little sewing machine did the business. Do you know that I fell in love with you the day you came into my store to buy the machine? And do you know that I deliberately damaged a sewing machine so that I might get acquainted with you?"

"You damaged my machine?" she inquired, evidently perplexed.

"Well, no, I didn't. I damaged another one by mistake—fixed the bobbin so it wouldn't work. As it happened, my strategy proved unnecessary, thanks to the accidental breaking of the belt on your machine."

Susie smiled. There was a queer, rather mischievous twinkle in her eyes.

"Yes, it was strange," she admitted. "I suppose you figured all was fair in love. Well, now I'll make a confession of my own. I fell in love with you the day I stepped into your store."

"I never suspected it," he exclaimed.

"I didn't intend that you should," she said. "But my heart was bumping so hard when you advanced to wait on me that I feared you would hear it."

"I also believed that all was fair in love," she went on after a brief pause. "In fact, I deliberately broke that belt—so I could have you fix it."

QUEER METHODS OF FISHING

In Palestine They Do Not Use Nets and Would Laugh at a Hook and Line.

The modern Palestine dweller tells us that he would now look in vain for boats "launching out into the deep," and working nets all night in the Sea of Galilee. Not that the fish have disappeared; they are to be caught there in millions, as also in the Jordan and Jabbock; but the Arabs, less accustomed to systematic work than the Jews of old, follow easier plans—the simplest of which is throwing poisoned bits of meal cake into the water, and then wading in to make a collection, a custom of which no other nation is like to rob them.

Another way of doing the work is by pelting the fish with stones, which can be done very profitably when the schools of yellow musht congregate. Some of the Bedouins, probably taking example by travelers, fire charges of small shot among them, and so get a bag; so thick are these schools that it is even said that a revolver bullet has been known to kill three fish.

Hook and line may be found very occasionally, but, as a rule, when the practices above are not resorted to, the fishing is done by small dip nets or large hand nets; in the former case the fishermen, standing on the banks, lower a kind of bird net which can be closed by the pulling of a rope, from racks or wooden platforms, and hauled up at intervals of an hour or so. Where the hand net is in use—it is a kind of cross between a butterfly and shrimp net—the fisherman wades in up to his waist with a bag on his shoulder, and is content to catch the fish one or two at a time. The fish of the Syrian waters are of many different species, but few are peculiar to the country.—Exchange.

Phenomenon Caused Alarm.

It is recorded in the Gentlemen's Magazine that on January 3, 1756, at four o'clock in the afternoon, at Tuam, in Ireland, an unusual light, far above that of the brightest day, struck all the beholders with amazement. It then faded away by invisible degrees; but at seven, from west to east, a "sun of streamers," appeared across the sky, undulating like the waters of a rippling stream. A general feeling of alarm was excited by this phenomenon. The streamers gradually became dissolved, and flashed away to the north, attended by a shock which all felt, but which did no damage. The affair seems to have been an example of Aurora Borealis, only singular in its being bright enough to tell upon the daylight.

POLITICAL NOTES

Fewer than thirty working days remain for Congress, if the G. O. P. leaders adhere to their plan to adjourn about June 1st, and the budget bill sent over to the Senate from the House many months ago is still sleeping. Given bi-partisan support and generally recognized as a much-needed reform, it ought to be put through without delay. The responsibility is with the Republican majority, for under the method of procedure followed in the present Congress, no minority member can get any measure reported out from committee without the permission of the majority. The majority assumed responsibility for the budget measure, making glowing promises as to the early adoption of this much-needed reform, but it has failed to make good its word.

General Wood now says he will accept Hays for his campaign manager, if nominated. If Senator Borah is to be believed, the General acts as if he would accept anybody for anything or anything from anybody if it will aid him, for "the nomination is the thing."

The Republican leaders spend a very bad half hour with their own thoughts every time they realize the utter failure of their efforts to prove that the war was a failure and President Wilson responsible for it.—New Orleans States.

Having sided the Johnson boom in order to head off Wood, the "Old Guard" Republicans are now wondering how they are going to stop Hiram. "Hell Roaring Hiram" is the new "red peril" to the standpatters.

Paraphrasing a celebrated American, the Republican Congress may say "millions for investigation, but not a word of praise for those who won the war."

Republican leaders in Congress are going ahead with their plans to suspend work about June 1st, regardless of how much work they will leave undone.

"Hays and harmony" sounds well, but is an alliterative untruth, so long as Johnson and Borah are running wild on the Republican reservation.

Wolf Seen Near Cattle Yards.

As Charley Gray was returning early Saturday morning from a trip to the river to look after fish hooks that had been set, he saw a big grey wolf near the King Bros. cattle yard and as soon as bold Reynard saw the Hopkins man, he lost no time in making his getaway, going in a northwesterly direction. Farmers are complaining of losing chickens, sheep and young pigs and it is time a wolf hunt was made, it only being a short time since a big wolf was seen near the Fairview school house. It is said wolves are quite plentiful in this vicinity and it is time war was waged against them.

Frank Miller, of near Maryville, was in Hopkins Sunday with the pelt of a big wolf he had killed near his farm, and Charley Flowers will have it tanned to be put to some use. Mr. Miller killed two old wolves and eleven young ones.

Wolves are also to be found in other parts of the county, the following being taken from the Barnard Bulletin:

Elvet McBride took his tractor to a wolf den one day this week and connected a rubber hose to the exhaust pipe, and ran it into the entrance of the den. A few minutes running of the tractor caused a young wolf to come out coughing and fall over dead. The boys in the crowd then dug into the den and found two other wolves dead from the gas. The den showed signs of frequent raids on chicken houses, for there were many bones strewn about. Elvet shot at a wolf that had a chicken in its mouth but failed to kill it.—Hopkins Journal.

THE GIANT SHIPYARDS AT HOG ISLAND, PHILADELPHIA, ARE CONVINCING EVIDENCE OF "DIAMOND CONSTRUCTION FOR STRENGTH."

An Automobile Starting Battery Guaranteed for Two Years!

A GUARANTEE is the measure of a manufacturer's faith in his battery—based on past performance. If he guarantees his battery for only ninety days or six months or a year, he is probably sure that it will last that long. But beyond the period of the guarantee he is asking you to take a risk which he is not willing to take himself. It is unbusinesslike for you to take such a risk when you can buy a Philadelphia Diamond Grid Battery that is guaranteed for TWO YEARS.

The Diamond Grid is the framework on which each of the plates is formed. Its "Diamond" Construction is similar to the Diamond Construction used on the ways and cranes at Hog Island and in most other strong structures. In your battery the Diamond Grid means strong plates and is your insurance against plate trouble.

The Philco Retainer is a sheet of hard rubber closely perforated with long narrow slots. A Retainer is placed flat against the active material on each side of each positive plate. In any battery the positive active material tends to slough off as the battery grows older. The slots in the Philco Retainer are so narrow that the material cannot readily pass through them and the result is greatly prolonged battery life.

Don't LetCatarrh Drag You into Consumption

Avoid Its Dangerous Stage.

There is a more serious stage of Catarrh than the annoyance caused by the stopped-up air passages, and the hawking and spitting and other distasteful features.

The real danger comes from the tendency of the disease to continue its course downward until the lungs become affected, and then dreaded consumption is on your path. Your own experience has taught you that the disease cannot be cured by sprays, inhalers, jellies and other local applications.

S. S. S. has proven a most satisfactory remedy for Catarrh because it goes direct to its source, and tends to remove the germs of the disease from the blood. CLOTHING PRICES GO DOWN—CHICAGO RETAILERS CUT FIGURE

Chicago, May 10.—Clothing is the first banana peel on which High Cost has stepped.

"Going down," is chorused by the trade, and the white collar lads join in the equine laugh, although perhaps somewhat tentatively. Of recent days the retail stores have been displaying reduced price goods in their windows, and the merchant tailors, too, are looking for a fall in textiles.

During the area of jumping prices clothing leaped higher than others of the necessaries. A survey issued yesterday by the national industrial conference board shows that last March the cost of living in the United States was 94.3 per cent higher than in July, 1914. Food went up 100 per cent; rent advanced 49 per cent, so did fuel and light, and sundries increased 83 per cent.

But clothing knocked them all cold by jumping 177 per cent. Men's overcoats, the report shows, leaped 230 per cent; women's coats, 204 per cent; women's knit vests, 230 per cent; men's union suits, 211 per cent; overalls, 247 per cent; men's work shirts, 228 per cent; women's shoes, 209 per cent.

One of Chicago's leading Loop tailors returned from the eastern market yesterday with prices for next year's stock still unsettled. Prices were at such a level that he did not care to run the risk of being caught with high priced bolts on his shelves.

KEMPER IN PLACE OF REED AS A DELEGATE TO FRISCO

Proposed to Substitute K. C. Banker Is Taken Up With State Committeemen.

A move to substitute W. T. Kemper for Senator Reed, rejected as a Fifth district delegate to the Democratic convention, has been started by the Democratic state committee. Ben M. Neale, state chairman, has sent letters to all state committeemen, stating that Mr. Kemper's name was suggested to him, and asking for the opinions of the committeemen on the filling of the vacancy.

The Reed forces have declared they will accept no other man for Reed's place, and are willing to go to the convention at San Francisco with one vote short. There also has been some talk that Senator Reed might go to the national convention and request a seat in the conclave as the accredited delegate from the Fifth district, but no word to this effect has come from the Missouri senator.

With Senator Reed, James T. Bradshaw of the grain inspection department at Kansas City, also was rejected by state convention as Reed's alternate. But the convention had no fault to find with Bradshaw, other than that he was paired with Reed.

It is probable that if Mr. Kemper is chosen as a delegate, Bradshaw will be made his alternate.

There is some question as to whether the state committee has the power to fill the vacancy, or whether the state delegation is to provide the missing vote. Neale, in his letter, is assuming that the state committee will fill the place, despite word from the national Democratic committee headquarters at Washington that the Missouri delegation should handle the situation.

Chairman Neale has called a joint meeting of the men's and women's state committees at Jefferson City May 20, and there the matter of filling of the Reed vacancy probably will be discussed. Also party leaders have been asked to meet with the state committee for the purpose of outlining "aggressive campaign work," and under this head something might come out of the gubernatorial nominee tangle.

TARWATER UNABLE TO FACE THE JURY NOW.

Gallatin, May 13.—Hugh Y. Tarwater, charged with first degree murder for the killing of Wes L. Robertson, editor, here Dec. 23, 1919, was physically unable to appear in the Daviess county circuit court here when his case was called Tuesday, according to Dr. P. L. Gardner and Dr. M. A. Smith, who were appointed to examine the defendant's condition daily, a week ago.

Tarwater is said to have lost more than forty pounds in weight since he was sent to jail after the killing, and he is in a weakened condition. No disease or ailment is reported by the physicians. They say his condition is due to his refusal or failure to eat.

The case was continued to May 24 by Judge Davis, who said he would proceed with the trial at that time if the defendant was able to appear. If Tarwater is unable to appear at that time Judge Davis said he would return every two weeks and hold court until the defendant is able to appear. Tarwater's attorneys asked for a continuance of the case to August or September, but this was refused.

Electric Light People Here.

C. C. Hellmers and Paul Kuchs, Maryville electric light men, met with a number of our citizens Monday afternoon regarding the putting in of lights at this place. Mr. Hellmers figured it would cost approximately $17,000 to extend the line from Ravenwood to Parnell and equip it in first class shape. He rather advised our people to form a company for this amount and own the plant or rather the system as extended from the Maryville plant. He also said it might be possible that his company would issue bonds of preferred stock for the above amount to the people of Parnell and vicinity, should they prefer it.—Parnell Sentinel.

EQUITABLE "Buy it of Brewer"

A MAN FOR MISS PELHAM

By JANE OSBORN

By the way, I've decided to get a man," Sarah Pelham did not speak as if she had made any more remarkable announcement than that she goes out to lunch, or any of the other things of daily occurrence in her office life in the advertising firm of Stone & Stone.

But William Stone drew up in his office chair and removed his shell-rimmed spectacles and looked at her closely. She was at the threshold of his office, about to return to her own.

"I said I was going to get a man," said Sarah again with finality. "You told me to select my assistant without consulting you—that I should rely entirely upon my own judgment. And that is what I have decided. Now, I am going to advertise for some quick-witted young man who wants to learn the advertising business. Nowadays one has to pay women as much as men, and for what I have to offer I think I could get something better in the way of an ambitious young man than I could if I took on a woman."

And though William Stone wrinkled his brows in perplexity and disapproval and was inclined to argue about it, Sarah sailed serenely out of his sight to her own office.

And Sarah Pelham did get her man—a clean-cut, clear-eyed young man whose broad chest and shoulders and robustness would have led you to surmise—as was actually the case—that he had recently returned from service in France. And it was because he had just returned that he was willing to start in as Miss Pelham's assistant. He had been content to keep books in his father's unprogressive hardware store before he had gone overseas, but he had come back with a keen desire to get into the advertising business, and with the desire a willingness to begin at the bottom rung.

His name was Leslie Brown. From the first Sarah Pelham found him entirely to her liking. William Stone watched him narrowly as he sat at his desk that was placed in the outer office, conveniently near to the door that led into Miss Pelham's room.

"I Said I Was Going to Get a Man."

One day he noticed that Sarah and "that young Brown," as he rather contemptuously called him, left the office together about lunch time. This was intensely annoying, so much so, in fact, that when he went to his own lunch he absentmindedly ordered a dish he never ate and left it untasted.

He made up his mind that he would not speak of the incident that annoyed him to Sarah Pelham. He never had interfered in the least with her goings and comings—in fact he had never in the five years that she had worked for him been the least interested in her except as a useful member of the staff.

But, despite his resolution, he found himself gravitating into her room as soon as she had returned from lunch—which was some half hour after he had returned.

"What's the idea?" he asked with a nod toward the outer office in the region where Leslie Brown's desk was placed. "Going to take lunch with that young Brown regularly?" he inquired. Now, Sarah had not had lunch with Leslie Brown. They had gone out together because Sarah had wanted to take him to see a certain rather difficult client to whom she wanted to give Leslie a personal introduction before he was detailed to look after his interests for her.

She had left Leslie making a splendid impression on this merchant while she slipped away to her lunch club. But she didn't explain this to William Stone. In fact, she hedged his question.

William Stone had been known in times past to take attractive young artists, to whom he gave orders out to lunch with him. But Sarah did not remind him of this.

"What's the idea of having him, anyway?" went on Mr. Stone. "I was thinking it over and I have never known a single woman in all my business experience who has had a man assistant. It's a funny notion, and I can't say that I am exactly stuck on it. What's the idea, anyway?"

"Well, for one thing," explained Sarah, "it saves a lot of time. If I had a girl and we became all friendly, I'd have to listen to her while she explained that she hadn't got in until half-past nine, because her mother had forgotten to wind the alarm clock, and then the maid didn't come to get breakfast and so on. Then I'd have to talk over her new clothes. She'd have her new hats sent here, and I'd have to give her my candid advice about them. Besides, I like a man's point of view. It puts punch in my copy. It's the combination of the masculine and the feminine—my intuition and judgment and his stronger grip."

William Stone did not find this explanation at all to his liking. "But it seems like disloyalty to your sex," he argued. "To say that you would rather work with a man than a woman—and you have always pretended to be such a feminist."

"Is it disloyalty to your sex to say that you wouldn't consider having a boy stenographer—that girls are more trustworthy, more reliable and pleasanter to have around? I believe you have made that explanation."

"That's quite different," almost snapped William Stone. "Besides, I don't see why you should object to my having girl stenographers."

Sarah laughed, yet she felt in Mr. Stone's entire attitude toward her something that was vastly flattering to her. After having worked for Stone & Stone tirelessly for five years and never having been looked upon as anything more than a useful bit of machinery, it was gratifying to the woman in her to find this absurd spirit crop out in William Stone which she could not interpret as anything short of jealousy.

And so the weeks rolled on. Meantime Leslie Brown made progress, and perhaps at first, out of sheer desire to tease William Stone, Sarah asked her assistant to have lunch with her—they could save time on a busy day, she said, if they talked things over at lunch. Then one day William Stone approached Leslie, whom he had scarcely spoken to before, with the result that that day Leslie had lunch at William Stone's club. They were gone two hours, and they had said much in that time. When they parted at the door of the office of Stone & Stone, William slapped the younger man on the back.

After that Stone wore a smile that was in strong contrast to the look of gloom that had been his for the days previous.

The next day he asked Sarah Pelham to stay after 5 and talk to him. He had made this request before when there was pressing business. And as Sarah lived near the office and had no home ties, she was not inconvenienced.

But the business interview did not begin like the other business interviews. "It's a queer place to say what I'm going to say," he began, standing in front of the window in Sarah's office and looking intently at her. "But it is something I can't keep to myself any longer. Sarah Pelham, I want to marry you. I love you—and it's the kind of love that wants to keep you all to myself. It's torture having you here in an office, going about to other offices. Sarah Pelham, you do love me a little, don't you?"

Sarah Pelham had perhaps divined that William Stone loved her, but she was completely taken by surprise by this spirit of self-confidence.

"Yes, I think I do," she confessed, "but how did you—how did you know? I didn't want you to guess it so easily. That's why I tried to make you think I didn't."

"You succeeded perfectly," assured William. "Fact is, I thought there was something between you and young Brown—that's what made me so jealous from the first. It was torture. I couldn't bring myself to ask you, so I took him to lunch and got my nerve up to ask him. And the young scamp's been engaged all the time. Fine fellow. I said more than I intended to—he seemed to guess how I felt about you. And I was thinking, Sarah Pelham, that it's been a good idea breaking in a man like that because now you and I can marry without doing much harm to Stone & Stone. Young Brown can work right into your job."

Alive After 2,000 Years.

Don't think that those microbes that were on that old book years ago when the baby had the croup have died of old age. Far from it. According to Dr. M. V. Gallippe, a noted French scientist, the life of a husky microbe is practically endless. For years he has been experimenting, and he now states that he has seen microbes 2,000 year old. Taking an Egyptian papyrus, dating from about 200 years B. C., Doctor Gallippe has soaked it in water and has seen organisms, dormant for centuries, renew their lives and begin to multiply anew. Rather interesting, isn't it, but why do all the disease giving things so far outlive the harmless things in the world?

ALBUS AND BOYER TO TAKE CONTEST TO CHICAGO CON.

John Albus announced today that he fully intends to carry the fourth district contest to the "court of last resort"—the national Republican convention at Chicago, June 8—and that he and John S. Boyer, who were elected district delegates in the "Trump" convention at Savannah, April, will be on hand at the big event, prepared to prove their case.

C. U. Philley of St. Joseph and L. C. Cottrill of Andrew County, the regularly elected district delegates, will be there to defend their title.

Albus and Boyer are now in the position of appealing from the district convention at Savannah, which has certified Philley and Cottrill as the duly elected district delegates of the national convention. It is understood that Boyer and Albus will appeal on the ground that the primary in Buchanan County, which elected delegates to the Savannah convention, was not held in compliance with the call of the state committee, of which Albus is a member, in that more voting places were established than were regularly provided for.

Our Congressman

What does he think of the farmer? Was he ever a farmer himself? Does he care more for free seeds for city folks than for county agents for farm folks? Is he for the farmers, now that he's elected, or has he forgotten them?

The COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

has been hunting up the farmers in Congress—and, let me tell you, it's like hunting for a needle in a haystack. At any rate, it is finding out who are the farmers' friends, and that's something to know.

In the issue of THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN that will be out next week there's a big article called "How Congressmen Vote." I wish you'd read it—it sure is an eye-opener. There's an election coming on, and the farmers should know who are their friends in Washington. THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN will keep you posted if you read it every week and follow its Washington dispatches. Best way to get them is by subscribing. Comes right to your mail box 52 times a year—a great, big farm weekly, full of fine, friendly articles.

ANIMAL LIFE AND CLIMATE

Abundant Proof That Extremes of Temperature Do Not Preclude Possibility of Existence.

The contention of Dr. Abbott of the Smithsonian astrophysical observatory that because of the cold climate of Mars life could not exist upon that planet is not convincing.

Polar bears rejoice in temperatures so low that little vegetation at any time of the year exists in the latitudes in which they are found. The existences of tigers in Koren, which has a New England climate, supposedly changed by sea currents when the country's fauna was tropical, shows how animals common to the hottest parts of the earth adapt themselves to climate as cold by comparison with the tropics as the climate of Mars is by comparison with the regions in which the Eskimos live. Monkeys from Africa died so fast of tuberculoses in heated houses that the mortality rate forced an experiment, as the result of which African monkeys are living out of doors all the year in one of Chicago's parks.

If life as we know it, human, animal or vegetable, could not withstand the climate of Mars, might not life adapted to the climate flourish? The fabulous salamander lived in fire. An Eskimo, newly arrived in Moscow or Bagdad, could believe that since men could live in such places reptiles easily might bask upon live coals and frolic in flames. Why might not life, adapted thereto, exist in a temperature of 300 degrees above, or below, zero if a man from the polar regions can become acclimated in the tropics, or vice versa?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

TAKE HIGH OFFICE MARCH 4

That Day Officially Set for Inauguration of the President of the United States.

President Washington was inaugurated for his second term, beginning March 4, 1793, and all the other presidents, except four, who were inaugurated March 5, because the 4th fell on Sunday.

The four exceptions were Presidents Monroe, second term, 1821; Taylor, 1840; Hayes, 1877; and President Wilson's second term, 1917. President Hayes took the oath March 3, 1877, and was formally inaugurated on the following Monday. President Wilson took the oath for his second term on Sunday, March 4. The usual inauguration parade took place the next day.

The question as to whether, in the event of March 4 falling on Sunday at the beginning of a term, there being an interregnum of one full day in the office, was first brought by John Quincy Adams when he was secretary of state. He applied for a dictum of the Supreme court to guide the manner of inaugurating President Monroe for his second term. The opinion of Chief Justice Marshall does not prohibit the president from taking the oath and entering his duties immediately after midnight of March 3, even if March 4 falls on Sunday.

Rare Biblical Collection.

An interesting collection of Bibles, some of which are rare books, others of which are valuable on account of their former possessors or donors, is installed in the Mount Holyoke college library. In one group are found the ancient versions of the Scriptures; the original Hebrew and Greek, including a miniature copy of the scroll of the law, called the Sefer Torah, the ancient Syriac, the Septuagint and the Latin Vulgate.

Among the four editions of the Latin Vulgate is one bearing the date 1538, with Luther's portrait stamped on the leather cover with a Latin inscription, of which the translation is, "If you wish to see the face of Luther behold the portrait; if you would know his mind, consider the book."

"Insult to Injury."

Little do we realize when we use this expression that we are indulging in a bit of wisdom. Unknowingly we are alluding to the classic of the classic, an old Latin fable quoted by Phaedrus from the more ancient version of Aesop. It is a fable about a baldheaded man, and as usual the baldheaded man is at a disadvantage. In this case it is a mere fly that takes advantage of him. Well, the baldheaded man was bitten on the head by a fly and when he attempted in retaliation to smite the insect he succeeded only in giving himself a vigorous slap on his bald pate. Whereupon, according to Aesop, the fly said jeeringly: "You want to kill me for a touch—what will you do to yourself now that you have added insult to injury?"

Our First Person Singular.

Is not English the only great language in which the pronoun of the first person singular is capitalized? How monumentally imposing is that upper case "I." If a writer is egotistic the capitals stretch across his page like a colonnade. When he writes "we" he descends to the lower case. But this orthographic solipsism, mark you, is shared by Americans, Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders—all who use the English tongue. It is therefore not to be set down to insularity, but to individualism—a stark, ineradicable, valuable quality of these various folks whose thoughts and feelings have been nourished by the same language.—Henry Van Dyke in Scribner's Magazine.

PIG-CLUB MEMBERS GETTING GOOD START.

The severe cold weather of early spring has caused many of the boys and girls in the pig-club work of the Agricultural Extension Service of the University of Missouri College of Agriculture, to become discouraged. However, in Atchison County, only two boys of the forty who started with gilts in the pig club have found it necessary to drop out from this cause. Early in April, twenty-three of the thirty-eight boys and girls in the Fairfax Pig Club reported that their gilts had farrowed and that the average number of pigs saved in the twenty-three litters was a fraction over six. Several of the boys had as many as three pigs and the largest number saved was nine. Many of the boys and girls had been able to save all of the litters in spite of the cold weather.

The Duroc-Jersey Record Association will offer $200.00 as premiums on the Duroc-Jersey class at the Fairfax show this fall. It is quite likely that the Poland-China Association will make a similar offer. These offers will bring the total to $500.00 for the Fairfax Pig Club show and sale to be held September 4 to 6. This sale promises to be the largest pure-bred hog sale ever held in Atchison County.

One of the northern counties of Missouri reports that the crop of early pigs has been materially decreased on account of the losses occasioned by the pigs coming during cold weather and that the pig crop will not be more than seventy-five per cent normal. However, the increase of pure breds will amount to one-fourth to one-third.

P. M. Osborn Is Dead.

P. M. Osborn, who died at his home in Stanberry Sunday morning, was a Missourian by birth and was born Sept. 21, 1856. He spent several years of his life in the neighborhood of Ford City, where he married Miss Beaglin, who survives him. The family has lived in Stanberry for several years. The funeral was held at St. Peter's church Tuesday morning, the Rev. Father Graham conducting the services, after which the remains were laid to rest in Calvary cemetery. The sympathy of the many friends is extended to the bereaved family.—Stanberry Owl-Headlight.

HOW PELLY PAID

By WILL T. AMES

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Because, some thousands of ships that should have been carrying the products of one people to the markets of another were rusting on the floor of the sea, sent there by the Germans, and because in consequence freight rates were so high that it paid better to take mad chances with the lives of sailors than to lay vessels up for repairs, the Twin Sisters dragged a jangle of loose plates through a West Indian tornado for fourteen hours, and then, after screaming for aid till her wireless broke down, jammed her nose under and went to the bottom in the midst of howling darkness.

Five days thereafter Fenton Pelly, dressed in the completely new clothes that had replaced the outfit he lost in the Twin Sisters, called at the home of Constance Brand, bringing her the story of sunny Frank Sudbury's tragic end.

They had known each other long, these three—ever since Constance was a pupil in the grammar school where she taught, and the boys, older by a year or two, played the part of rivals for her favor. Later, in their grown up time, Pelly had taken it rather badly when Constance, spurred by his persistence, had told him flatly that her choice of Frank Sudbury was deliberate, irrevocable and quite beyond his undoing.

Fenton sneered a little at her choice, for already he was a seagoing man with an engineer's papers, while Frank had not yet found himself. Then came the war, and Frank, serving in the navy, by the time it was over had discovered that his lines of life lay on blue water too.

That's how he came to be second officer of the freighter Twin Sisters that night when she went down in the tropic storm, and how Pelly came to be the bearer of the tidings, for fate had shanghaied them into the same ship.

Constance, white faced, dry eyed, clinging to her woman's pride and courage, with fingers that were bloodless where they gripped the book in her lap, listened without a word or sign. Pelly was respectful, unimaginative, a bit stolid as always. He talked along in a monotone, as if he had rehearsed the tale over and over on his way to make easier the breaking of the news.

"At the last," he said, "though we'd been expecting it for hours, the end came sudden like. She broached to and twisted herself all out of shape like a rotten stick; you could feel the stump under you when those old rivets began to go. It was just like the tearing of a worn-out rag. She raped wide open and the whole Atlantic ocean came in. Of course it was a case of piling into the boats and getting away from her—if we could. There were nineteen people in our company, and four boats—more than enough. Six of us got into one of them and got it into the water, right side up by good luck. Something happened to the other boat on that side of the ship, for it came down full first, as near as we could see, and dumped the crew into the sea.

"The lights were burning—they burned to the last, for the electrical plant was on the main deck—and I could make out Frank's white sweater, the only one on the ship. He was in that boat. When the boat came down by the run we put about and headed for the spot. The sea was running in enormous great swells, with very little chop.

"Those men shot out from under the lee of the ship like chips, and we contrived to get them all except Frank. He was swimming and managed to get as close to us as I am to you. I reached out both hands to grab him—and he threw up his arms and went down."

That was the story. It made in Constance Brand's lonely life the difference between noon and midnight, between a dream day in May and a stark midwinter blizzard.

Her parents were dead; serious, purposeful, she had made few light friendships; outside her work Frank Sudbury had filled her existence for years. She found herself now living in a spiritual vacuum. A vast, resentful unrest filled her. She became afraid of her own rebellious thoughts.

In this mood Fenton Pelly supplied in some unaccountable way, a link with her dead happiness. She had not liked the man too well, but he had been there in the last terrible scene—and he had tried to save her lover.

As the weeks passed she admitted him to some share in her life, as he had been a sharer in its tragedy. And Pelly, with a tactfulness and delicacy beyond what she had deemed him capable of, found ways of making himself well-nigh indispensable. He was with her a great deal.

He had decided to stay ashore, he said. He had saved some money and was looking into the garage business.

At last Pelly poured out his heart again. Constance, softened toward the man and thinking of herself as one whose wrecked life could thereafter yield some shreds of content only to giving happiness to others, did not definitely deny him. It was too soon, she said, for such thoughts. As for the future—who could tell?

At the end of four months, because he had been cautious and discreet and very kind, and devoted himself to her wholly, there came an evening when the time seemed ripe to Pelly to clinch his claim. They stood at the gate of Constance's boarding place. Pelly, with a world of deference and an obvious struggle to muster the needed courage, placed his hand over the slender one that lay upon the picket.

"Constance," he said, "if you can't live in sunshine, why not at least take shelter from the storm?"

Why not, indeed? Why keep on with this life of racking torment, all so hopelessly useless, when there lay at hand peace, security, usefulness, perhaps content?

The girl, hesitating for an answer, gazed far off down the quiet summer street where the whispering maples cast flickering shadows across the form of the only wayfarer in sight, a man just passing hurriedly under the corner arc lamp. Suddenly Constance's form stiffened.

A strange, wild, eager light sprang into her eyes. "Frank!" she cried, and instantly was gone, running like a child down the street and into the very arms of the oncomer.

When, in their mutual joy and in the girl's tumultuous resurrection of happiness, they reached the gate Fenton Pelly was not there. Constance never saw him again. It was very strange, she told Frank over and over again, that their good friend should have so unaccountably disappeared.

And though Frank told in circumstance the miraculous story of his rescue from a huddle of ship's joiner work that he had grasped in the nick of time—how he had been picked up by a fore-and-after bound from New Orleans to Good Hope, and started back within the hour, and with no chance to cable, on a tramp that carried no wireless and had reached port only three hours before—there was one thing she did not tell Constance till after they were married.

Pelly's story was true, save in one detail. "I was the last man to try to get into Pelly's boat," said Frank, "and I could have made it, for I had gripped the gunwale with both hands and was not exhausted. But he beat my hand with the butt of a pistol that he always carried at sea, and I had to let go. I knew why, of course; it was because he wanted you. And the reason I didn't wire from New York today was because I didn't want him to get away; I wanted to put him over the jumps for what he did. But when I got home and you met me the way you did—why, Pelly might have stayed right here for all of me. He's punished worse, far worse, than the law could ever punish him—having you know."

Valley of Wonders.

A veritable natural masterpiece is the "Closed Cathedral," of Red Rock canyon, in southern California, a study in magnificent coloring, so gorgeous and yet so softly harmonious that no mortal artist's brush could hope to equal it. The edifice is of tremendous size, with an entrance 25 feet high and 15 feet wide, solidly blocked at a depth of 12 feet. Pure white, deep blue, red, yellow, green, and all the intervening shades are blended in the decorative scheme. One of the results is the suggestion of an immense stained-glass window. The whole aspect is of vast antiquity, enhanced by a crack or fault extending diagonally across the front, and through the general formation—evidence of an earth slide before or possibly soon after the processes of erosion began. So realistic is the cathedral effect that one involuntarily listens for bells calling the pious to prayers.—John L. Von Blon in the Wide World Magazine.

The Strenuous Life.

This phrase originated with the late Theodore Roosevelt. In a speech at the Hamilton club, Chicago, in 1899, he said: "I wish to preach not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life; the life of toil and effort, of labor and strife; to preach that higher form of success which comes not to the man who desires merely easy peace, but to the man who does not shrink from danger, from hardships or from bitter toil, and who out of these wins splendid, ultimate triumph."

Wherever refined and particular people meet—at the seashore and other fashionable places—you'll find their choice of refreshment almost unanimous. You'll note most always that is the demanded drink. The reason is simple—Cherry Blossoms has a flavor essentially individual—a delightful taste that gratifies every tongue—that soothes the jaded palate—whets the appetite—and spreads good cheer broadcast.

How He Felt.

"Where are you going?" the dentist asked of a man starting to leave the waiting room. "I've been waiting here forty-five minutes for you to pull a tooth for me." "Well, I'm ready for you now. Step in the operating room." "I'm not ready for you now, doc. When I first came in here I was chock-full of doughboy courage, but every second some of it oozed away, and now I guess I must feel about the same way a German in a dugout felt just after he had shouted 'Kamerad!' and wasn't certain whether the answer would be a hand grenade or an order to march to the rear."

As Usual.

"What's the discussion in congress?"

"There is a bill up to exterminate the barberry bush, which is said to disseminate black rust."

"The barberry bush, eh? I suppose they'll proceed to beat around it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.
